

NC State Habitat for Humanity was headquartered here all week at the Habi-shack, where they collected each individual shack's donations, kept track of all funds raised, sold T-shirts, and helped spread the word about their work and the mission of Habitat for Humanity.

Volunteers from the Comedic Improv Association (CIA) and Campus Christian Fellowship (CCF) persuade a passing student to donate to their collection.

Matt Poisel, Andy Binder, and David Hoffman, all officers with NC State's Habitat for Humanity, prepare building supplies and tools for shack construction. All of the materials used in Shack-a-Thon are donated, and the event runs on a $0 budget.

NC State's campus chapter of Habitat for Humanity was recognized in 1991. Since then it has helped to build over 20 houses with Wake County Habitat for Humanity and now builds about a house each semester.

Another Shack-a-Thon morning! Volunteers staff their shacks 24 hours a day all week, working, studying, eating, and sleeping in the shacks with their fellows and friends.

Members of the Ben Franklin Scholars, representing the shack they share with the Thomas Jefferson and Parks Scholars, circulate the lunchtime crowd as the cast from the Wizard of Oz in keeping with their shack's theme. Creative panhandling like this is what keeps Shack-a-Thon interesting all week.

At least two people must spend the night in each shack but by Wednesday and Thursday nights everyone wants to hang out and sleep at Shack-a-Thon.

Dr. Tom Stafford, vice chancellor of student affairs, takes a direct hit with a water balloon helping the Caldwell Fellows raise funds on Thursday.

Shack-a-Thon offers students a rare chance for some hands-on construction and demolition. Here the last sections of the Habi-Shack are unscrewed so that the shack, which was purchased by an individual for a donation towards the total, can be transported to its new home.

Teamwork: NC State Habitat members and officers Jon Weaver, Ashley Cowan, Matt Poisel, Andy Binder, and David Hoffman hang out under the floor of the Habi-Shack during deconstruction.